

A World of Many Peoples

- Think about differences and similarities between ourselves and others.

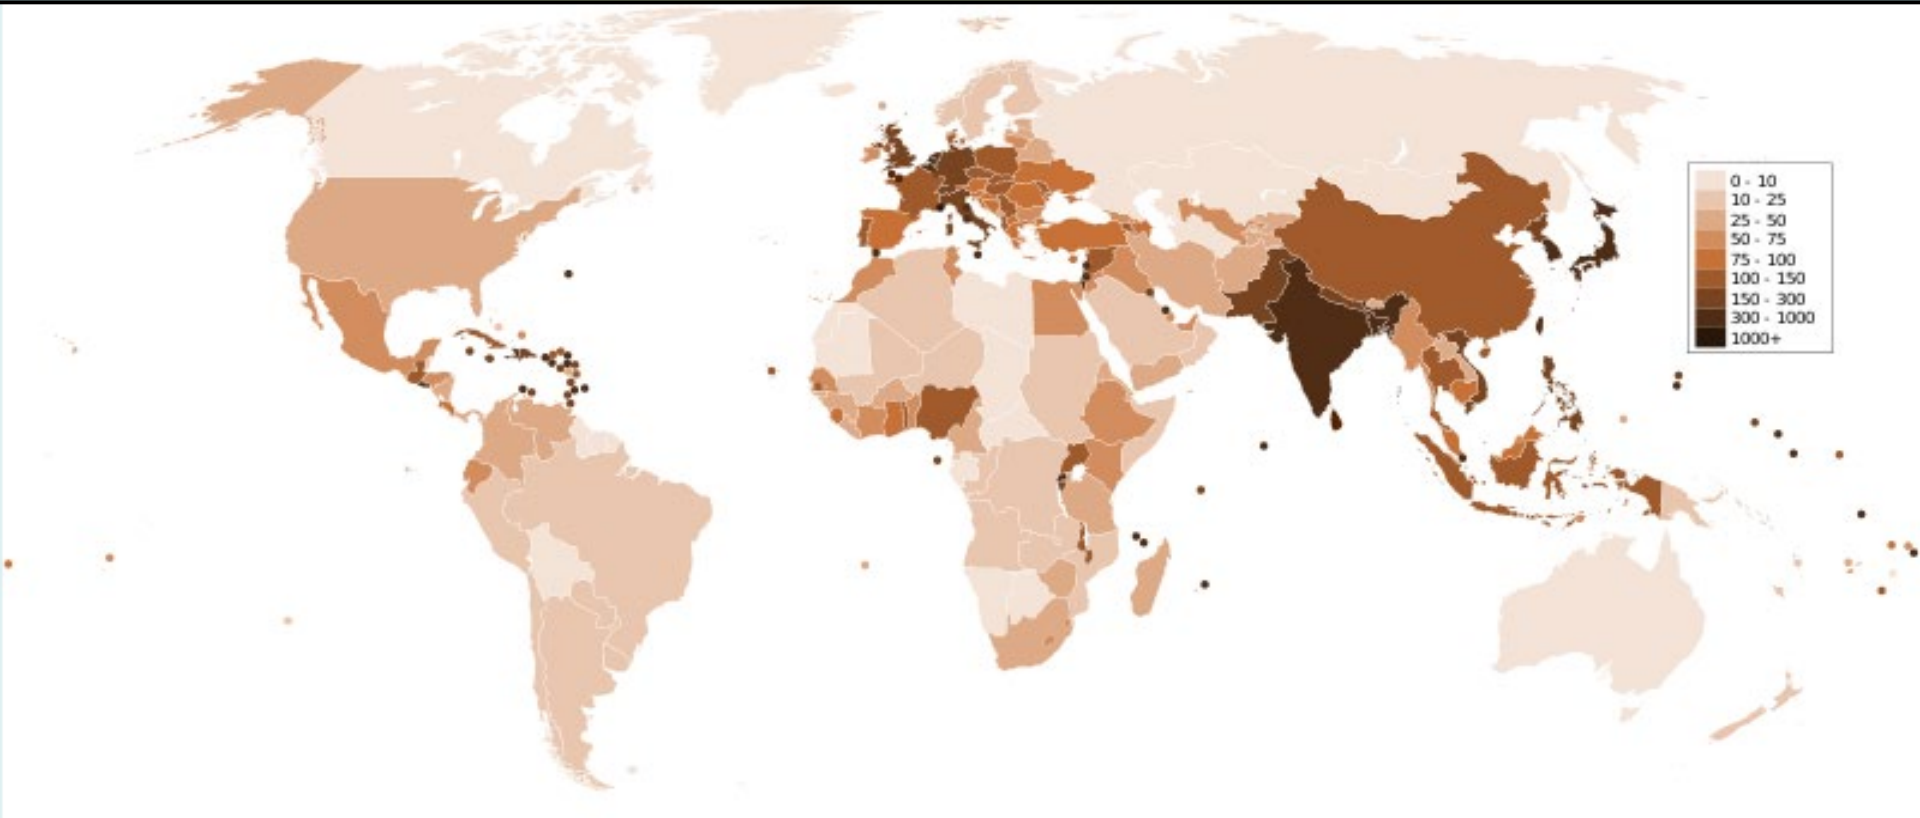

- Understand that treating people differently on the grounds of race or appearance is wrong.

- Understand that our differences make the world a more interesting place to live in.

How do we treat people we don't know?

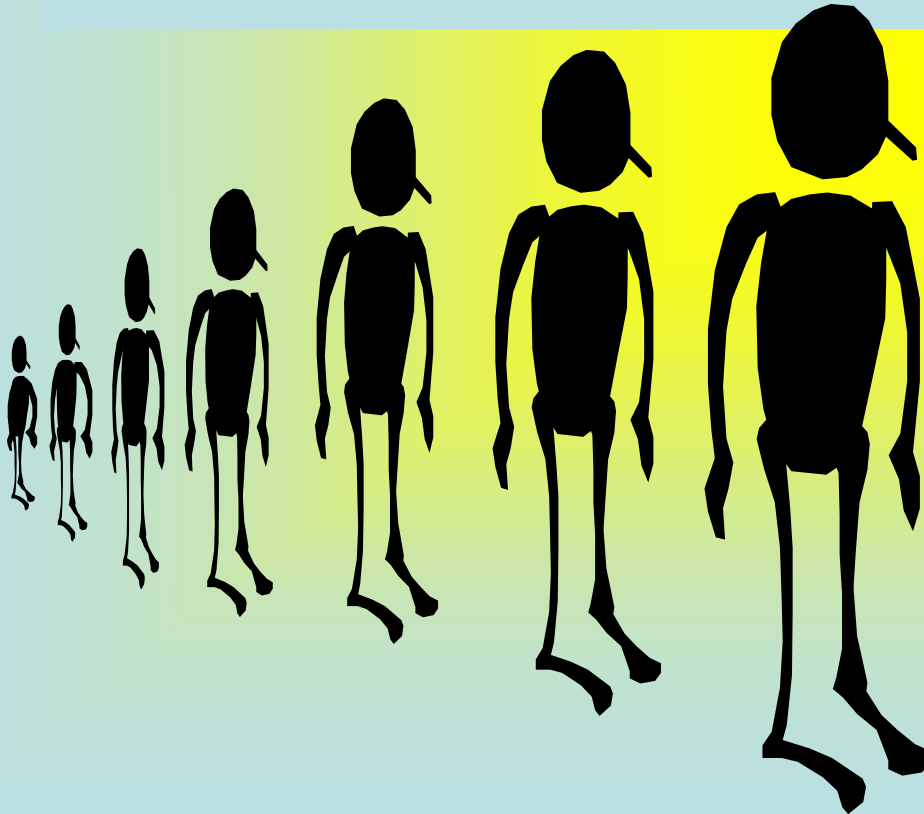

In every country in the world live people of different race, culture and identity.

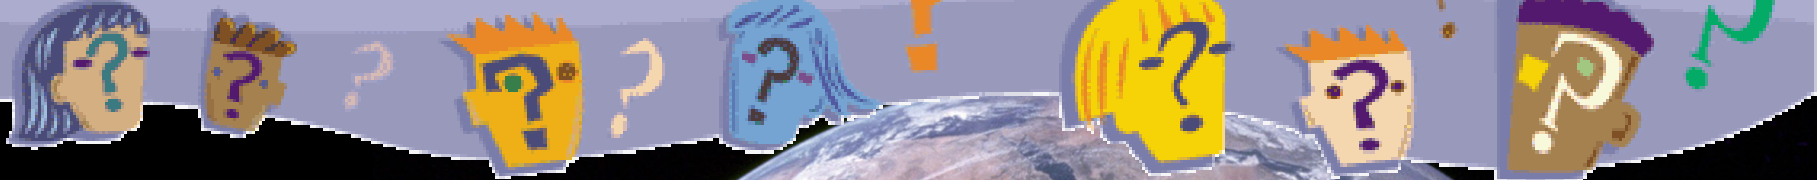

Our World

How many people are there in the world?

6.94
Billion!

We are all different!

People different because of their looks, skin colour, culture, language, food, music, religion or customs.

All of these things put together make up a people's culture.

People have always travelled in search of new places to settle and live.

Today, many countries have different groups of people living in them.

Cultures merge as new people bring customs with them from their old country, but they also adopt the culture of their new country.

For example...

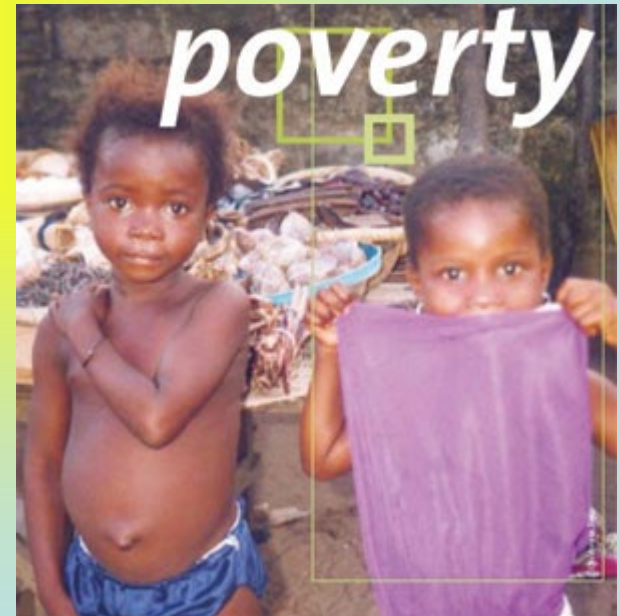

You can try food from different cultures in the restaurants of most cities.

Rich World

Poor World

Over many years, a country gradually develops as its industry improves and its people raise their standard of living.

The countries of the world are at different stages of development.

Poorer countries are known as less developed countries and richer countries are known as more developed countries.

Life in less developed countries is often hard. Children spend less time at school and so are less able to read and write.

People may have to spend more time looking for basic items like food, fuel and water. There may be few hospitals or doctors.

But life in less developed countries can also be rich because of the rich culture and family lives.

Each year, the world population grows by over 90 million.

This means that it increases by almost three people every second. In the time it has taken you to read this paragraph, there will be enough extra people in the world to make at least two football teams!

Our differences make the world a more interesting place to live in...
